

Top 10 Findings

Most college students are worried about getting their degrees because of health, cost and refund concerns.

1. 91% of college students have experienced feelings of anxiety or stress and 81% have trouble falling or staying asleep. These are just two examples of how mental health challenges are distressingly common among students.
2. 1 in 5 of students know a friend or classmate who has withdrawn for health reasons raising the impact forced medical withdrawals are having on college campuses.
3. 74% of students say they are unaware of the tuition refund policy at their school, confirming widespread uncertainty about college refund policies.
4. 73% of students say they are uncertain whether their school would reimburse them if they were to withdraw, indicating a lack of financial literacy when it comes to one of life's biggest investments.
5. 40% of four-year students say they have considered withdrawing from school, illustrating doubts about whether students believe they can finish their degree.
6. 60% of four-year college students say they are concerned about being able to pay for college and...
7. 74% for two-year students say they are concerned about being able to pay for college, highlighting that affordability is a major concern of college students.
8. 35% of college students who say they might not complete their degree say it's due to financial issues they're facing confirms the strains on college families.
9. 53% of college students say that they could not afford the cost of an extra semester if they were forced to withdraw due to a medical condition.
10. 44% of students say they might consider withdrawing due to their or their family's current financial situation.

Download the full report at collegeconfidence.com

